

In this I find evidence that the early months of the epidemic strongly determine the social norms that they create. We also see that not only the way patients move but also how to sit, how much to cough, how much to sneeze, how much to wear and how much to avoid, is to be like the dominant group. (p. 16) (my own words and italics). I learned up the moral attitude of a religious text, and this is what Mary's argument looks like:
